Soviet missiles concern Shultz

WASHINGTON (AP) — Deployment of two new long-range Soviet missile systems "raises very considerable questions" about whether the Kremlin is complying with strategic arms limitation agreements, Secretary of State George Shultz said Sunday.

Even so, Shultz added, the Reagan administration is sticking to the terms of the pacts for the time being in hopes of success in the arms talks that opened last week in Geneva, Switzerland.

Shultz appeared on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley," and was asked if he thought deployment of Soviet SS-24 and SS-25 rockets violated the SALT II agreement that limited the numbers of nuclear missiles. "We think it raises very considerable questions about that," he replied.

He was especially critical of the SS-24, a

10-warhead missile fired from mobile launching pads. "What it shows is the continuing modernization of the Soviet land-based weapons," Shultz said. "I think the emergence of weapons of that kind only emphasizes the importance of defense against them because they're not in a fixed place where you know where they are. . . . The mobility of the missiles increasingly raises problems about verification."

Stanislav Menshikov, a Soviet spokesman appearing on the ABC program, denied that the SS-24 or the single-warhead SS-25 violate the pact. "We are doing all we can to maintain SALT II," he said.

In the 1979 SALT II agreement, which the United States never ratified but still maintains, both sides promised to limit the numbers of launchers and warheads on long-range nuclear weapons.

Acid rain focus of talks

QUEBEC (AP) — President Ronald Reagan and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney launched their St. Patrick's Day "Shamrock Summit" Sunday with an announcement designed to smooth over the issue of acid rain, the single greatest irritant in U.S.-Canadian relations.

The two leaders said they would exchange special envoys to examine the sensitive environmental issue and report back within a year.

"Together, we will find an answer to this problem," Reagan said after a half-hour meeting with Mulroney.

Mulroney, who stated that the pollution problem was going to be the top issue for him at the summit, called the move "a significant step forward. . . . The president and I are confident that this approach will produce real results."

However, there was no commitment in the two men's statements to a full-scale cleanup program, similar to what Mulroney had been seeking in advance of Reagan's goodwill visit.

Reagan named former Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis as his special envoy, while Mulroney named former Ontario Premier William Davis.

Bush favored in Dorchester poll

SEASIDE (AP) — Vice President George Bush was the overwhelming favorite Sunday among Oregon Republicans, who took part in a straw poll measuring the popularity of possible Republican presidential contenders in 1988.

The poll, taken at the annual Dorchester Conference, might have been the nation's first for the next presidential election.

Bush drew 143 votes, while his next closest competitor, U.S. Rep. Jack Keimp of New York, drew 57 votes.

U.S. Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon received 42 votes, followed by former Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee with 17. U.S. Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole with 10 and her husband, U.S. Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas with 8.

U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms of North Carolina ran last with 3 votes.

Sunday's straw poll brought to a close the weekend meeting, which began Friday night with a keynote address by Elizabeth Dole.
