The first excitement of the weekend for the Duck squad came early Saturday as the men's novice/frosh 4 took second in their heat, edging out the University of Washington. The cheery young lads toasted their accomplishment with yells of exaltation and by dousing each other with sweeping handfuls of water.

Later in the day the men's novice/frosh 8 captured a third place spot in their heat, qualifying them for the finals. They finished with a fourth place finish overall.

John Larson, Oregon crew club publications man, noted that this was an especially commendable accomplishment considering the weight obstacles confronting them. As all of the other 10 clubs in this event packed their shells with heavyweight power, these oarsmen faced the challenge with only 3 of their 8 members ranking in the heavyweight class.

The men's heavyweight 8 took a shot at the coveted "Lafromboise Cup" on Sunday but had to settle for a second place finish as they were edged out by Pacific Lutheran University.

The most successful of the Duck competitors was the women's lightweight 8. After having an undefeated season in four previous races, they captured "The Paula Mitchell and Colleen Lynch Cup" by easily defeating second place PLU in their final competition.

Head coach Mike Holcomb, tinged with delight over the day's events, pointed out that the girls are seeded No. 1 going into the Pacific Coast Championships in Sacramento next weekend. They will be rowing against six other clubs, including defending champion San Diego State. With a win there they are looking at the probability of heading off to the nationals.

Oregon crew member Gayle Johnson, who represented the United States in the lightweight 4 world class championships last summer, says, "We're very strong this year. We have a good chance, but it's going to take a lot of work."

Following the rigorous mornings throughout this past year, that work will be second nature for Oregon's crew.
