The system

Look around Americans, all over the world the United States supports tyranny and injustice.

Why? Paranoia? Misjudgment? Ronald Reagan? No.

We support horrible regimes because of the capitalist system. It is dependent upon profit, without profit companies collapse and the economy dies. How does a company earn profit?

Mostly through cheap labor and cheap raw materials. Where do we have these? In America, where unions ensure a decent wage for laborers, where we have safeguards against destruction of our natural resources?

Of course not, and capitalism can't survive solely in an environment like this.

Companies must go elsewhere, get cheaper ore from South Africa, ship it to their factory in Brazil, pay the workers a couple dollars a day, and then sell it. Where?

The people in Brazil have no money. Who does? The people in the advanced nations. Sell it there, reinvest the profit in India (not in job-hungry America), you have to pay your workers here) make it cheap, sell it, keep the economy going. The rich nations get richer, the poor ones stay poor.

How do we keep this system going? Support the capitalist classes in the Third World, they can't survive without American investment and markets, they're eternally loyal.

Their own people? They starve, of course, they don't have the money to buy things they work to make. Why not pay them more? It's difficult, too much competition. You must brutally suppress them to keep order. Who gives them the guns? The Americans. Why? We're fighting uh... Soviet tyranny.

Unfair

Whether non-smokers like it or not, there is a smoking population at this university.

I agree that you have rights to breathe relatively clean air, but there is room for all of us. I will agree to not smoke in your space, if you will agree to provide me with a place to smoke, study and be comfortable.

I am assuming that there have been complaints about the smoking in the Fishbowl, since I arrived on Tuesday morning to find "No Smoking" signs posted everywhere. But simply kicking us out is no answer. Perhaps a few fans in strategic locations could ease the problem.

Or — provide us with another room. The two areas allowed to us now have many problems. The area by the cafeteria is very small, totally unventilated, and a passageway through which everyone — even non-smokers — must pass. And, there are no smaller tables for more private studying. The booths in the Skylight area is also a smoking area — however, getting a table there is next to impossible.

My suggestion is that either adjustments be made to make the Fishbowl comfortable for both groups, or that the non-smokers get the entire main floor, and smoking be allowed in the upstairs area that includes the Skylight and Refectory.

I'm sure this doesn't exhaust the possibilities.
