

EMU would house outlet Bookstore may open affiliate

The University Bookstore may open a satellite store in the EMU if the plans for the project prove to be financially beneficial, said Jim Williams, bookstore general manager.

Interest in opening a store to act as a support system for the new EMU computing center, which is scheduled to replace the building's east bowling lanes this year, was expressed Monday at a meeting of the bookstore's board of directors, Williams said.

The bookstore board and the EMU board of directors now are discussing whether to open the satellite store, but have made no specific decisions on space or costs involved, said Adell McMillan, EMU director.

In other business, the bookstore discussed how recent improvements in their computer systems will make ordering course books easier and more efficient this year.

The bookstore has worked at upgrading its computer systems the last three years so that it could improve its book ordering process and work better with faculty and staff, Williams said.

"Computers are opening a bunch of doors for us and allowing us to become a better resource for the school," Williams said.

Williams also is looking at the possibility of establishing a guaranteed book program at the bookstore by winter term.

The program would allow students to get a temporary photocopied version of textbooks if pre-ordered books do not arrive at the bookstore before classes begin. The student then can turn in the photocopied version for the regular text when it arrives, Williams said.

But this will be done only for books that have been ordered by a professor before the bookstore's deadline, he added.

"We think that this program will be very beneficial for the students and will put a little more pressure on the faculty to get their ordering done on time," Williams said.

The board also gave its approval for Williams to start negotiations with First Interstate Bank for a new automatic teller machine, which would be installed on the east side of the building along Kincaid Street.

The bookstore currently has an instant teller machine on the south side of the building that is serviced by the U-Lane-Credit Union and acts as a bank card exchange for many campus-area banks. First Interstate is not included in this exchange.
