

Festival offers summer fun

It was more than your average summer fair. The 25th annual Scandinavian Festival in Junction City, which began on Thursday, offered four days of events, including the popular 10-kilometer Scandia Run on Saturday and a barbecue dinner on Sunday.

Audiences flocked to two stages to watch a variety of Scandinavian music and folk-dancing, and then hit the beer garden and wine terrace to cool down with refreshing beverages. A younger crowd congregated at the Bailey Park tennis courts to demonstrate some of their own dancing.

Filling up on aebleskivers and home-baked cinnamon-rolls proved to be a popular activity as the lines at all the food booths remained long for the duration of the festival.

Festival organizers could not estimate exact attendance because there was no admission charge. However, before the festival began the turn-out was predicted to be somewhere between 60,000 and 100,000.
