Bombs kill two in Salt Lake

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A stockbroker was killed Tuesday by a booby-trapped bomb left outside his office, and a woman was killed three hours later in a related blast at a former business associate's home, police said.

Police said an electrically triggered bomb blew up about 8:15 a.m. in the Judge Building, killing stockbroker Steven Christensen, who had once owned a controversial Mormon document. About three hours later, another blast at a suburban home killed a woman who apparently discovered a bomb intended for someone else, authorities said.

"We're following some leads we are privy to right now," said Police Chief Bud Willoughby, whose investigators were being assisted by the FBI and the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol and Firearms.

Police asked business associates of Christensen and the owner of the home to evacuate their houses Tuesday afternoon while they were searched for bombs, Salt Lake County Sheriff Pete Hayward said.

Police Lt. Bill Gray said at least eight bomb threats involving other buildings in downtown Salt Lake City had been reported, but none was determined to be valid.

The home belonged to Gary Sheets, a business consultant who authorities said once worked with Christensen.

Christensen, 31, had become well-known for obtaining the "Salamander Letter," containing a contemporary account of the translation of the Book of Mormon, and then donating it to the church.

Police evacuated two floors of the Coordinated Financial Center Building, a block away from the Judge Building. Sheets is chairman of Coordinated Financial Service.

Police said the first blast was triggered by an electrical timer connected to high explosives. The bomb contained nails and other shrapnel, Gray said.

15 Marines killed in early morning crash

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Fifteen Marines were killed and four rescued Tuesday when a helicopter plunged into the ocean while taking off from a ship for maneuvers in pre-dawn darkness.

Gunnery Sgt. John Simmons said the twin-rotor CH-46D "Sea Knight" helicopter, flown by a crew of four, crashed in 50 feet of water about four miles off shore on takeoff from the USS Guadalcanal.

One body was recovered shortly after the 6 a.m. accident and four survivors were plucked from the water near the carrier-like helicopter and troop ship, Simmons said.

Navy and Marine divers conducted a search and rescue operation in Onslow Bay much of the day for more survivors, but Simmons said the effort was called off in late-afternoon and hope had been abandoned of finding anyone else alive.

Names of the dead were withheld pending notification of relatives.

The cause of the accident was under investigation.

The four survivors were in good condition aboard the ship, said a Marine Corps statement read by Sgt. Pamela Vajner of the Camp Lejeune public affairs office.

On Tuesday afternoon the Guadalcanal sat in choppy water about four miles offshore while several small boats circled at its stern, said Barry Thomas, a Jacksonville Daily News photographer who flew over the ship.

bably the worst mistake the media can make in covering a crisis.

"We are not diplomats, we are reporters," Friendly said. "One haunting moment that should jar all of us is the morning an ABC anchorman turned to Nabih Berri during an interview and asked, 'Any final words to President Reagan this morning?'"

Friendly's address was one of a weeklong series being given by the Wayne Morse Chair. The chair was created in 1978 as a living memorial to the late U.S. senator and dean of the University law school.

Friendly, whose grandfather is a former mayor of Eugene and the namesake of Friendly Hall, will speak again today at an ASUO-sponsored Brown Bag Forum in the EMU Forum Room at 11:30 a.m. He later will be part of a panel discussion on "Professional Ethics in Journalism" in Room 221 Allen at 2 p.m.
