Goldschmidt says no debate until after May primary

PORTLAND (AP) — Democratic gubernatorial candidate Neil Goldschmidt flatly refused on Tuesday to debate his Republican challenger until after the May primary in Oregon.

Goldschmidt told reporters in Oregon City that "us folks that are running in my primary are going to have to deal with one another before I get to deal with somebody in another primary."

Former secretary of state Norma Paulus had challenged Goldschmidt to a debate when she formally announced her Republican bid for the governor's office on Oct. 28.

Goldschmidt said, "I've got to get through my primary first and I think it's very important that this election gives the folks in each of the parties a chance to build a platform."

Paulus, campaigning in Portland on Tuesday, said she was disappointed that a debate would have to wait until after the primary.

"Everywhere I go, all kinds of organizations ask for it," Paulus said. "I think the public wants it and I'm ready to provide it and I'm sorry that he isn't."

Oakridge sawmill still to be closed in mid-December

OAKRIDGE (AP) — There has been no progress in talks between officials representing union loggers and a representative of Pope & Talbot, which plans to shut down its Oakridge sawmill around the middle of December.

"It wasn't very productive," Bennie Youngren, first vice president of International Woodworkers of America local 3-246, said of Monday's meeting between the union and John Wold, the company's director of human relations.

Youngren said the company official "pretty much told us the same things" that were in a letter announcing plans to close the mill.

Pope & Talbot announced Nov. 6 that the sawmill, which is the Oakridge-Westfir community's only major employer, would be closed on or about Dec. 13. The company said it lost $2 million on the mill last year and had lost $13.5 million over the last decade.

Wold said before Monday's meeting that Pope & Talbot was open to "creative suggestions" for cutting operating losses at the mill.

Union officials, however, went to Monday's meeting with no offer in hand and came away reporting no change in the company's intention to pull out of Oakridge.

The IWA local represents woods crews at Oakridge. No meeting had been set with officials of the Lumber and Sawmill Workers Union local that represents mill workers.

A union official said the company may be threatening to close the mill to gain wage and benefit concessions, and said workers would oppose such concessions.
