Arctic Dreams

Imagination and Desire in a Northern Landscape

BARRY LOPEZ

ARCTIC DREAMS is a journey to a largely unknown land, a world filled with beauty and fraught with danger. It is the story of the arctic landscape; of the animals - muskox, caribou, polar bear, bowhead whale, narwhal - and the people who live there; of awesome ice and benevolence of light; of the dreams of explorers who have ventured there. Based on extensive research and travel in the Arctic, and filled with fascinating detail, ARCTIC DREAMS is also the story of the integrity of a largely untouched land and what an understanding of the land can mean in an urbanized, 20th-century world.

BARRY LOPEZ is a contributing editor to Harper's and North American Review and the author of a number of highly acclaimed books, including the best-selling Of Wolves and Men, for which he was awarded the John Burroughs Medal in 1979. He lives in Finn Rock, Oregon.

Area children receive a glimpse of college life

By Mary Lichtenwalner

Hundreds of children will attend the University today to play, paint and learn what their parents do as part of Campus Kids' Day.

The day, sponsored by the Student University Relations Council, allows elementary-school children of the Eugene area to see what the University is like, says Julie McKinney, a coordinator.

"It's a chance for the parent who's a student or faculty member to show their kids the University," she says.

The program, now in its third year, was originally set up for children of University students and faculty, but now includes any elementary school children who care to participate, McKinney says.

"We originally expected about 150 kids this year, but now we're expecting more like 400," she says. "It's spreading like wildfire — the community is getting to know about it by word-of-mouth."

Activities will begin at 10 a.m. with a geology department visit and a backstage tour of Robinson Theatre.

At 11 a.m., children can view a hologram exhibit or hear a storytelling session at the University Bookstore. The Song and Dance Troupe and the University Duck mascot will entertain children at a brown-bag lunch held in Room 167 EMU.

At 1:30 p.m., there will be tours of the University Press and the Museum of Natural History. Later at 2:30, a mural-painting party will be offered in the EMU and a volleyball clinic will be given by Sue Harbour, the University volleyball team member who recently was named one of six of "Today's Top Athletes" by the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

There also will be dancing and singing workshops. Several events will be repeated during the day to ensure that children can attend all the events they want, McKinney says.

lot of our culture — the way we've been brought up," she says. "For example, many men are told that if a woman says 'no,' she really means 'yes.'"

Honest, open communication is essential, she adds. "Guys need to realize that no means no. If sex is forced, it's rape."

The ASUO Women's Task Force will help define the nature of acquaintance rape and violence against women during a three-day "awareness symposium" set to begin Tuesday at the University.

"Many people still think of rape as sexual," says Lien Shutt, coordinator of the task force. "People need to become more aware of what rape really is."

Julie Garstka, Panhellenic president, says the Greek system also is interested in raising people's awareness of acquaintance rape. Garstka says that she and Rob Taylor, president of the Interfraternity Council, have been working with the Office of Student Development since January to implement some type of educational program for Greek members by next fall.

According to a recently released report, "Campus Gang Rape: Party Games?" fraternity parties, which are the model for many student's social lives, can often be blamed for encouraging instances of sexual abuse.

"Sexually abusive behavior, including acquaintance gang rape, often arises out of very poor communication and misunderstandings among young men and young women and differing expectations about appropriate sex roles and behaviors," says Julie Ehrhart, co-author of the report.

"Both men and women do need to understand what rape is and how they can be held accountable," says Ann Berner, a Greek advisor in the Office of Student Development. "It is an issue that has to be addressed."
