

More than 1,000 start the Great Peace March

LOS ANGELES (AP) — More than 1,000 people walked out of town Sunday on the second day of the 3,235-mile Great Peace March for nuclear disarmament after a City Hall send-off by Mayor Tom Bradley and a night camping out in tents.

The marchers spent the first night of the coast-to-coast hike in tents in a parking lot at California State University-Los Angeles, before setting out on Sunday's 16-mile leg to the Santa Fe Dam recreation area at Irwindale.

"We had a real warm reception here," Kimberly Salerno, 25, of the San Francisco Bay area, said Sunday. "I'm curious to see if people up the road in Barstow applaud us or throw tomatoes at us."

Late Sunday, the marchers set up camp in Irwindale, walking about eight hours to reach the Santa Fe Dam recreation area beneath the foothills of the San Gabriel Mountains.

"It's terrific," spokeswoman Carol Kinsey said of the walkers' mood. "They're tired. I think a lot of people are realizing that 15 miles every day is tough."

A few people had dropped out and there were some sore feet, but all in all it had been a good day's walk, she said.

The route will take the march sponsored by PRO-Peace through 37 cities and 15 states to Washington, D.C., in the next eight and a half months. The procession is scheduled to reach Las Vegas, Nev., March 22; Denver on May 21; Des Moines, Iowa, July 16; Pittsburgh on Sept. 25, and Washington on Nov. 14.

PRO-Peace organizers had secured campsite insurance or waivers through tonight and worked Sunday to obtain campsite and walking insurance for the rest of the way, Kinsey said.

The California Department of Transportation and some cities along the march route wouldn't grant parade or other permits without $5 million insurance coverage.
