University group provides companionship to disabled

By Sarah Kitchen
Of the Emerald

A new University group hopes to provide friendship and guidance to mentally disabled high school students. Greeks United for Individual Development of Exceptional Students (GUIDES) was established winter term to pair disabled students with members of the Greek system.

Students met with Greek members for the first time Thursday night to plan activities. Alletia Minor, a 20-year-old South Eugene High School student, was treated to a pizza party by her new friends from the Chi Omega sorority Sunday. Other students have been invited to attend dinner at a Greek house tonight.

Disabled high school students, many of whom are between the ages of 18 and 21, have difficulty meeting people their own ages, said Connie Johnson, a South Eugene High School teacher who works with disabled students.

After speaking with Johnson, Sigma Alpha Epsilon member Richard Lewis decided to do something about the problem. Lewis and Johnson agreed that disabled high school students need to interact with people their own ages.

Lewis contacted sororities and fraternities, and after receiving a favorable response, decided to go ahead with the project. Lewis received assistance from Jeff Sanders, Johnson's teaching assistant, and Roz Slovic, who coordinates the Parent's Graduation Alliance, a specialized training program.

A member from each of the 10 participating fraternities and sororities is hosting a disabled student, who will be invited to attend house dinners, sports events and other activities.

Johnson contacted parents of disabled students in her class and said she received favorable responses.

"It is frightening sometimes for our parents to try something new, and it is often brave to try something new," she said.

Johnson believes everyone involved with the program will gain from it, particularly members of the Greek system who will "become very good friends with these students," she said.

Charlotte Nowosielski, Minor's mother, has waited a long time for a program like GUIDES, she said.

"I once suggested to a teacher that something like this happen a few years ago, but she was not interested," Nowosielski said.

"This program sounds wonderful. There is no one in our neighborhood who has befriended Alletia. I know that she will really enjoy whatever will be planned," she said.

Club Sports celebrates sports week

Everything from aerobics sessions to fencing demonstrations will be offered this week when the University Club Sports, intramurals and EMU recreation center programs join to celebrate National Recreational Sports Week.

The celebration begins today with the first of three aerobics sessions and will continue until Sunday when the Club Sports baseball team hosts Pacific University at Howe Field at 1 p.m.

Free aerobics sessions will be offered on the east lawn of the EMU today, Tuesday and Wednesday at 12:15 p.m. It will be moved into the recreation center if it rains.

The Waterworks Canoe Co. on Franklin Boulevard will offer free canoeing as part of an open house Tuesday through Friday, and there will be various sports demonstrations each day in the EMU lobby.

The Club Sports crew team will demonstrate training techniques on Tuesday, and on Wednesday, "Sports Bloopers," a 25-minute movie narrated by Warren Miller, will be shown.

The Tae Kwon-Do club will give a demonstration Thursday, followed on Friday by a fencing demonstration.
