

The Company Store to feature both traditional and unusual junk

Disposable culture will find another refuge for its refuse today as a new thrift store opens in Springfield. Not unlike other thrift stores, the Company Store, 225 Main St. will carry traditional items like furniture and records, but will be distinctive in that most of its items would have otherwise been buried at the town dump.

The store is owned and operated by Allied Arts, a recycling business who operate a booth at the county dump in Glenwood.

The company catches disposables before they're thrown out and "keeps them in circulation," says Trip

Sommer, a company spokesman.

The store will operate out of a building the size of a small warehouse which has been converted from office space.

Sommers says it's often surprising the items people throw out. Company repairman either fix or strip down disposables like bicycles and televisions for their parts.

The Company Store, originally located in the Whiteaker neighborhood, was begun by Lane Economic Development Council (LEDC) in the early '70s as a link in the recycling process by recovering reusable and repairable items and making them available to the public at a nominal cost. Sommers says.

U.S. Representative Jim Weaver will participate in the grand opening ribbon-cutting. Weaver has called Allied Arts a model small business. Sommers says.

At the opening ceremonies, which start at 2 p.m., music will be performed by "Still Dreaming," a '56 Chevy will be raffled off and students from Springfield Middle School will read a tree dedication poem.
