

Some like it wet, some like it...drenched!

Local fans of the great outdoors found more to do these past days than just sit in the sun. Many headed for the Willamette River near campus with innertubes, rafts and swimsuits in hand, finding the water still a bit chilly but suitable for their kind of fun.

At the top, a raftful of young people ran into some actual whitewater on their way down the Willamette. Another pair (bottom right) shared a giant innertube, and still another brave pair (above) dove right into the water. Some stayed out of the water, though, leaving it all to the natural habitat (below).

While temperatures ranged in the 80s over the weekend and Monday, forecasters predict cooler temperatures, clouds and possible showers in the coming days.

Photos by Ross Martin and Steve Gibbons

