

Purchase of NCC dormitory awaits emergency sanction

By Chris Norred

The University's purchase of a parking lot and residence hall from neighboring Northwest Christian College must now be approved by the State Legislative Emergency Board.

The Oregon State System of Higher Education board, at its monthly meeting Friday, decided to ask the Emergency Board to increase OSSHE's limit on expenditures for land purchases so the University can complete the purchase from NCC.

The OSSHE staff will request the limit increase when it meets with the Emergency Board, Nov. 6 and 7. The OSSHE board approved the University's purchase of the NCC property in September, but the issue of the land expenditure limit was overlooked at that time.

The Legislature establishes a limit on the amount of money OSSHE can spend on land acquisitions. Currently that limit is $500,000, which has been adequate in the past, according to OSSHE officials. But in the current biennium, a $400,000 land purchase at Portland State University and the University's $500,000 purchase will push OSSHE over the limit.

The OSSHE staff in November will ask the Emergency Board to increase the limit by $750,000 "to permit completion of the approved need for the space, and because money for the purchase will come from University housing and parking fees rather than the state budget.

The NCC property for sale is on 12th Avenue between Alder and Kincaid streets. The parking purchase, and to provide opportunity for other smaller purchases which may yet occur within this biennium."

The Emergency Board is expected to approve the University's purchase because of the sincere lot has space for more than 50 cars. The residence hall has six apartments and is expected to be used for married student housing.

The $500,000 purchase cost of the lot and building will be divided between University parking operations and the housing department. Approximately 80 percent of the cost will be paid by parking operations and 20 percent by University housing.

In other business Friday, the OSSHE board:

- approved the start of a master of science degree program in Engineering Management at Portland State University;

- deferred action on Western Oregon State College's request for the start of a Public Policy and Administration degree program;

- deferred approval of amendments to state residence rules pending changes in the wording of the amendments;

- approved a preliminary design for the Oregon Police Academy at Western Oregon State College;
- approved improvements to the wave research facility at Oregon State University;

- approved $17,195,000 worth of projects for the rehabilitation and alteration of the University Hospital and Clinics at the Oregon Health Sciences University;
- approved the schematic design for an Eye Center at OHSU.
