"Psychic ESP Adventure" attracts a varied crowd

Palm readers, tarot card readers, face readers, and mediums gathered this weekend in Eugene at the "Psychic ESP Adventure".

Cassie Carroll founded ESP Adventure a year ago, and since then has been organizing fairs throughout the country. Carroll, herself a psychic reader, invites various professional psychics from around the world to participate in the fair.

"I find there is more interest in the subject, and that people are more aware that they have psychic abilities," Carroll said.

Iris Betts, from Boise, Idaho, has been doing professional palm readings for eight years. Betts became interested in the subject after taking community education classes in palm reading.

Betts, who was raised a Mormon, said that palmistry was not a profession that she would have chosen, however once she studied it she was unable to ignore the subject.

"After taking the classes, my intuition refused to leave me alone. I kept seeing combinations of things that would give me more insight, and palmistry became a tool of looking and investigating for me," Betts said.

Betts also does psychic investigation work, which includes locating missing children, missing objects, and stolen objects.

Betts said that she works more with private investigators than she does with the police. The police are slowly coming around to using psychics to help them with their investigations, Betts added.

When trying to locate a missing child, Betts said she tries to tap into that child's energy and vibration; by doing this, Betts said that she gets mental pictures of the child.

"The first thing I do when I'm working with missing children is I discern whether or not they are living. If they are living, I get something that represents that child's living energy, such as clothing, a stuffed animal, or a pet."

Betts said that she also does map "dowzing" by using a crystal pendulum to locate the child's location on a map.

"I start with a city or a state map to determine the longitude, and the latitude of the child's location, and then I go to a block map to get more detail."
