second-place Stanford.

Oregon lost a tough one to UCLA in Mac Court earlier this season 12-15, 15-9, 11-15, 11-15.

The Ducks will have their work cut out for them on the Bruins' home court, where UCLA flaunts the best home-court record in the conference (10-2).

"I don't think (the Bruins) have blatant weaknesses," Rees said. "They have good people playing and good people on their bench — but they can be beat."

The Oregon-UCLA match up looks to be one focused largely on each team's hitting attack.

Here is a look at some of the statistics involved:

•The Bruins lead the nation in kill average (16.83 a game), while the Ducks stand sixth on the list (15.89).

•Oregon boasts a powerful one-two offensive punch in junior Teri Kramer and freshman Michele Krebsbach; Kramer leads the nation in the individual kill department (5.45) and Krebsbach ranks fifth (5.02).

•A lot will be riding on the performance of the Ducks' setter Stephanie Snyder and UCLA's setter Ann Boyer. The two catalysts are ranked one-two in the nation in assists with 13.80 and 12.69 averages, respectively.

Despite the impressive statistics held by each team, the Ducks have nothing to lose when they visit UCLA.

"We can do a couple of things — help ourselves and make the standings (Pac-10) interesting," Rees said.
