Fair to feature health information

By Tonnie Dakin
Of the Emerald

The second annual Health Celebration will take place Tuesday in Room 167 EMU to better inform students of the various resources available at the University Student Health Center.

"We want to inform students of the educational and service aspects of the Student Health Center," said Liz Goeke, coordinator of the Lifestyle Planning Program.

"This is a way to let students know about what is happening in the health center," Goeke said. "We want students to learn preventative health measures."

The Health Celebration will concentrate on five areas that constitute a student's health and well-being: fitness, nutrition, sexuality, health habits and stress management. There will be different tables set up for each area, with University students and faculty to answer questions.

Students can learn how to weigh their body fat with the University's hydrostatic weighing machine, which can be helpful in determining a correct fitness plan, she said.

There will be videotapes on the subject of AIDS available throughout the day. One videotape was made by Dr. James Jackson, director of the Health Center.

A representative from the new dental facilities on campus will be available to provide information about dental care. "The neat thing is... they are going to be responsible for dental health and education, not only for prevention," Goeke said.

Peer health advisers also will be available to make appointments and answer questions.

"Peer health advisers are students helping students," Goeke said. "If needed, they can work out a health program for students and help change behavior through support."

signature to get out of grade school for the seventh game of the World Series.

Arriving at a meeting room at City Hall, my eyes met up with a diverse assortment of the Eugene community. Some were retired citizens who were looking forward to this experience like eager patriots, others were career men and women nervously looking at their watches.

I sat through the entire process. The judge was a calm, middle-aged man. He was very warm and friendly, and made everyone (except me) feel as though it were a privilege to be there.

After the meeting, he pardoned me from this terrible November destiny.

Other students might keep a few things in mind. Most jury clerks will attempt to work around the academic year and will, upon the student's request for a deferral, postpone the call for duty until summer, according to Michaud.

If a student asks for an excusal, the judge comes in to play. The judge may deny excusal and grant deferral, or may shorten the assigned time and defer the remainder, depending on the circumstances.

Also, the courts no longer use the registered voters list to pick participants, thanks to ORS 10.110 passed last January.

"We have broadened the program out to licensed drivers and homeowners," Michaud said.

They are also looking for other modes for variety's sake, such as records from the Fish and Wildlife Commission.
