abuses of banned chemicals such as DDT, said Norma Greer, a member of the Northwest Coalition for Alternatives to Pesticides.

"There could still be uses out there, easily," Greer said.

The EPA also has banned captan, but growers can still use the chemical for another two years, she said.

"Phosdrin is extremely dangerous," she said. And malathion "disrupts nerve systems. It's basically a nerve gas."

According to the World Resources Institute of Washington, D.C., over 300,000 farm workers nationwide are affected annually by pesticides.

"We feel farm workers are canaries for the rest of the population," Vasquez said.

Another reason for the boycott are the policies of California Gov. George Deukmejian, Vasquez said.

"Since the Deukmejian administration has been in, his appointments, particularly the general counsel, have refused to enforce the law," she said, in reference to the Agricultural Labor Relations Act. The act, which passed in 1975, allows free union elections in the fields.

"Any law is only as good as the people who enforce it," Vasquez said.

Chavez first attracted national attention more than 20 years ago when he formed the UFW.
