

through COOL (box, page 31). Bill Hoogterp, a 1986 grad of Aquinas, is field coordinator for the Boston-based National Student Campaign Against Hunger. While still at Aquinas, Hoogterp managed to raise $10,000 for local hunger-relief charities through a town cleanup. The link between local and global action appealed to NSCAH (sponsored by Public Interest Research Groups and USA for Africa), which adopted the idea as a national campaign last spring at 250 schools. "Students are like mosquitoes in a nudist camp," says Hoogterp. "They know there's a lot to do, but they don't know where to start."

Money for lawyers: While fulfilling to students, volunteerism also pleases administrators—it makes them look good and can ease town-and-gown friction. The 125-member College Compact, which includes Brown, Georgetown, Harvard and Stanford, was created earlier this year by college presidents to promote campus activism. Schools have put money on the line along with moral support. Georgetown has a special service floor in Copley dorm. Harvard has funded its new Public Service Program (complementing the work of an older student-run group, Phillips Brooks House Association, Inc.) with part of the interest from a $1 million endowment.

Some administrators are trying to en-

Making the Most of Natural Resources

There are many clearinghouses for volunteer programs; some simply provide information, while others supply leadership training or even grants for worthy projects. Among the groups that concentrate on student participation:

Campus Compact
Project of Public and Community Service
Box G
Providence, R.I. 02912
(401) 863-1119
Begun by university presidents and now comprising 125 schools, this group is gathering the first solid data on school service in the 1980s through a poll of mem- bers, and holds conferences on service issues.

Campus Outreach Opportunity League
180 18th Street NW
Suite 705
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 783-8855
COOL is building a school network to promote comprehensive, broad-based community service. Its new "Resource Book for Students in Community Service" is destined to become an indispensable reference.

National Student Campaign Against Hunger
National Hunger Clean-Up
37 Temple Place
Boston, Mass. 02111
(617) 292-4800

Sponsored by the campus-based Public Interest Research Groups and USA for Africa, NSCAH gives money to groups that increase awareness of hunger both within the United States and abroad, and sponsors projects like National Food Day and the National Hunger Clean-Up.

National Association of Student YMCAs
1901 University Avenue SE
Minneapolis
Minn. 55414
(612) 373-9700
Working to regain their historic prominence in the service field through the existing network of Y's, the association provides more than 30 college-based member Y's with leadership training and consultation on projects.

BABY BOOMERS.

At only four ounces, this baby is anything but a lightweight. The GE FM Stereo Headphone Radio—with convenient collapsible headband. One small example of how no one lets you experience the Power of Music like General Electric.

POWER OF MUSIC

116370