opens, Adams said. While on the job, they need to know all of the reindeer's names, and they need to encourage children to be good, she said.

In addition, Santas are never allowed to say, "Ho, ho, ho," because it frightens small children. They always refer to "folks" instead of "parents" because it is a broader term and encompasses more lifestyles, and they never make promises to children, Adams said.

It is helpful but not necessary for a Santa to have a background working with children, and "you really have to like kids... and of course you have to believe in Santa," Adams said.

"The true belief is in the magic of Christmas... if you don't believe, it's pretty hard to fake it," she said.
