What do you think of the National Organization for Women's plan to renew the drive to ratify the ERA?

'I like the ERA, but I don't think it really is the time for it now... women have achieved quite a bit of equality now... so if they start pushing it, I think it will do more harm than good. Maybe if they tried some lighter tactics.'

— Lisa Reager, undeclared, freshman

'I think the whole thing is a good idea, in the general philosophy, but it's going to be almost impossible for them to do what they're trying to do. I can understand why they're asking what they're asking, but I think there's too many concrete philosophies that they can't change.'

— Peter Porter, general psychology, senior

'I feel they should because in the present society women are being subjected to inequality, and men still have a superiority complex. The women will be treated much better.'

— Albert Lai, senior, economics

'I agree with it. And the people who are worried about separate bathrooms are confusing the issue. In our society we need laws to bring equality to women.'

— Victoria Shaw, resident potter, EMU Craft Center

'I think that it would be wonderful if it happened, both in terms of legal and symbolic effects, but my fear is that the support won't be there. I feel that we as a nation haven't shown what we need to do to create equality for women.'

— Lynn Pinckney, graduate student, law
1985-86 ASUO president

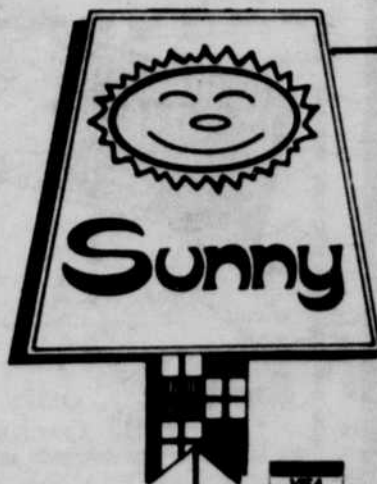

'I think it's a total waste of time because they've been hammering at it for so many years that it's obvious that the American public doesn't support it. I think they'd be better off spending money on state and local issues.'

— Bob Flynn, graduate student, economics
