"They're what I call water

rats — they're around the water all the time," said Van Rossen, motioning towards the pool.

The coach would eventually like to see the Physical Education Department "house all the lost sports" and base the teams strictly on student-perpetrated programs. In other words, get back to the old days, when there was more of an "intramurals sports" atmosphere that recognizes athletics and academics. It appears to be working at poolside, where the consensus is this is a more easygoing atmosphere when compared to an intense, win-oriented ethic that is indicative of most college sports.
