Telecourse provides alternative to ordinary University courses

The University will present a telecourse on the history of the Civil Rights Movement in America this term. The course will be based on a six-part Oregon Public Broadcasting Service television series.

The TV series called "Eyes On The Prize," will be broadcast on PBS stations throughout Oregon beginning Jan. 21 and ending Feb. 25.

The series was developed by The Civil Rights Project, Inc., a Boston-based independent film company founded in 1968. The recently completed series is being offered by the PBS Adult Learning Service program for the first time this winter.

Telecourses are offered regularly at the University through various departments in conjunction with the Community Education Program.

The fee for the course is $55 for full-time UO students and $184 for the general public.

The class meets Jan. 14 for an introductory session with University Professor Calvin Harris. The rest of the course is based on independent study of the films and readings assigned by Harris.

"The readings are intended to supplement the series and to give students an historical overview of the struggle in race relations," Harris said.

In addition, some readings will focus on the dynamics between the organized labor movement and the Civil Rights Movement. "That's one thing that's not in the 'Eyes On The Prize' series, or at least it's not emphasized as much as it ought to be," Harris said.

The series primarily focuses on the period between 1954 and 1965. According to the PBS preview, "Eyes On The Prize takes the point of view that the period of the contemporary Civil Rights Movement is one of the most significant in our history."

The first part of the series, "The Awakening," plays Jan. 21 at 10 p.m. and Jan. 22 at noon. "The Awakening" will focus on post-World War II events that led to the modern black freedom struggle, including such stories as the lynching in Mississippi of 14-year-old Emmett Till, and the Montgomery, Alabama boycott of public buses.

The final five parts will be shown at the following times:

- part two, "Fighting Back," will air Jan. 28 at 10 p.m. and Feb. 5 at noon;
- part three, "Ain't Scared of Your Jails," will air Feb. 4 at 10 p.m.;
- part four, "No Easy Walk," will air Feb. 11 at 10 p.m. and Feb. 12 at noon;
- part five, "Mississippi: Is This America?" will air Feb. 18 at 10 p.m. and Feb. 19 at noon;
- part six, "A Bridge to Freedom," will air Feb. 25 at 10 p.m. and Feb. 26 at noon.

The University Foundation, an independent, non-profit organization, owns the radio station, said Clifton Cole, accounting executive director of the foundation.

This fall the University opened KWBX-FM in Bend under a similar arrangement. KWAX and KWBX are the only 24-hour all-classical public radio stations in Oregon.

KWAX has received requests from other areas in Oregon to establish broadcasts but the response was greatest from Coos County and Bend.

"While down the road we would consider expanding, no other places are high enough a priority to warrant it right now," Bjornstad said.
