Project Saferide Coordinator Shannon Meehan says expanded routes will allow more women to take night classes.

Project Saferide adds route to service off-campus areas

The ASUO's Project Saferide, started at the University last spring to protect women from rape, will begin driving an off-campus route tonight in addition to its on-campus route.

The ASUO had planned to operate an off-campus route beginning last term, but was unable to find enough volunteer drivers, according to John Booth, chairman of Westmoreland's tenants council.

The half-hour on-campus route travels to all the dormitories, the EMU, the Main Library, the Law Library, the sororities and as of this term, through the closed part of 13th Avenue.

The hour-long off-campus route will go from the EMU Fishbowl down 13th Avenue to the Law Library, the Main Library and then to the east campus area. It then will continue to Amazon Family Housing, the west campus area and to Westmoreland Family Housing.

"I've had a couple of women call and say they are really excited that the van is going to be going to go out to Westmoreland and Amazon, and the UI people are very happy that it finally
