posals but did declare his goals. "We will build an economy that is a magnet for opportunity and an economy that attracts success. We will stake Oregon's claim to business profitability, and we will assert the manifold comparative advantages of all of Oregon."

Goldschmidt expects to be measured by how well he fulfills his pledge "that the Oregon we leave our children will be enhanced and enriched and in no way diminished by the decisions we make and the work we do," he said.

Introducing Goldschmidt, Sen. President John Kitzhaber asserted his confidence in the new governor. "In Neil Goldschmidt we've been given a new governor who typifies the Oregon spirit: innovative, intelligent, and above all else, determined to make Oregon a better place," he said.

In her address, House Speaker Vera Katz claimed several people have asked her, "Aren't you excited about the new governor?" As a result of Goldschmidt's win, "Few have not felt it — that palpable sense of excitement in the air that animates so many of our conversations, that spark of community and common purpose that has stirred in our soul before," Katz said.

Several audience members laughed appreciatively as Goldschmidt hitched up his pants in preparation for taking the oath. Goldschmidt joined in the ruckus with a whoop of his own after making his pledges.

The newly-crowned Goldschmidt descended the rostrum in a musical procession. His family joined him in a reception line where he greeted his citizens and signed autographs. Goldschmidt also hosted a public reception in the capitol Monday evening.

The 64th legislative assembly was also sworn in early Monday.

bought out the stores, the owners failed to continue the union contract held with Chuck McKay, the previous owner. Shortly thereafter, the union hired people to walk a picket line in front of the stores.

"The goal is to make customers aware that this is a non-union store and hopefully get them to not shop here," Wallace said.

Store manager Rich Dahl said the store is not in the union because the employees have continually voted against union representation.

"It's not a case of employees calling up the union demanding that the store be unionized. No one has complained at all," he said. "We have higher salaries, the same benefits, and Food Value offers profit sharing, which employees of other stores do not have."

"Plus, we don't have to pay $24 monthly union dues," he added.

Wallace believes the picket is doing some good, but he's not sure how much. He noticed that until August, there was a steady drop in customers and an increase in people who had left the store because it is non-union. That number wasn't
