take into account the additional charges brought against Smith, Hunt said.

Adell McMillan, EMU director, said the allegations so far do not involve any children enrolled in the EMU's child care center. "To the best of our knowledge, we cannot remember a time when Mr. Smith was ever alone with any of the children in our School of Community Service and Public Affairs in 1978.

Hill became acting vice president for academic affairs and provost in 1980, only to be appointed to both positions in 1981.

Olum's first encounter with Hill was in 1976, when Olum first came to the University as a candidate for the position of provost and vice president for academic affairs.

saying a ban on classified research would attract businesses to the park.

"Research, be it university or commercial, suffers from lack of a critical discussion; our open park would attract just those companies that appreciate that aspect of science," he said.

In addition, Stahl said, those participating in classified research are subjected to government clearance, which involves an FBI investigation of the political beliefs of participants, their families and associates.

And it is a crime for a participant in classified research to share findings with a student or colleague, he said, adding that both the teller and the listener facilities," McMillan said.

Dennis Reynolds, EMU child care coordinator, has drafted a letter to parents of children enrolled at the center explaining the charges and offering counseling services if the parents have questions, McMillan said.

Reynolds refused to comment on the case.

can be punished.

If the senate passes the motion with more than a two-thirds majority, its opinion will be forwarded to the State Board of Higher Education, which will make the final decision.

If that happens, the State Board will demand an explanation, and there won't be a good one to give, Olum said. He added that very little classified research is carried out at any research park.

In addition, the possibility of classified research being conducted at the park undetected for long is slim, he said.

"It is unthinkable that germ biological research would be done on our little research park," he said.
