What do you think of Oral Robert's claim that he is being held hostage by God?

'Oral is slitting his own throat by alluding either consciously or unconsciously to the recent paying off of terrorists to free hostages. He's making his God out to be a common criminal — what does that make salvation?'

—Marcy Goicochea, junior, spanish

'I think it is wrong the way he is using his followers, because a lot of them have a lot of faith in them and to put a threat as big as that on them is a big demand.'

—Ken Cooper, junior, political science

'Why doesn't Oral Roberts contact President Reagan? Maybe he'll take weapons instead.'

—Scott Landuck, senior, biology

'It is kind of ridiculous, because by doing that he is basically saying God is going to reduce himself to taking lives for money. If people want to give they will give on their own.'

—Stuart Samuals, senior, journalism/history

'Mostly I would really like to see if God would go through with it.'

—Jay Dow, political science/mathematics

'I think he is crazy. He is appealing to people's vulnerability and their emotions, and unfortunately I think those people will give the money.'

—Cin Chubb, PhD, health education
