crease sales. Les Berg, who owns the British Connection with his wife, expects his rent to increase but still backs the renovations. He expects some of his prices to rise but said that is a normal process.

"We've been accused of turning into Valley River Center," Obie said. "We have a lot of people that come down here in the mornings and sit and drink a cup of coffee and read their newspapers and take up a lot of space. We love to have them. We're not trying to get rid of them. We're just trying to make the place more comfortable for more people."

Obie expects many of the vacancies at the market to be filled within two months. The space formerly occupied by the French Horn will become a cafe operated by the Metropal Bakery. The French Horn has moved to the L & L Market building at 16th Avenue and Willamette Street.

The Genesis Juice co-op still runs a warehouse and supplies juice to local stores but has not yet established another retail business.
