

Ducks edge USC at buzzer; crush UCLA over weekend

The Oregon women's basketball team registered an important Pacific 10 Conference sweep over the Southern California schools this weekend in McArthur Court, elevating its chances to receive an NCAA tournament berth and possibly be ranked in this week's poll.

The Ducks edged 18th-ranked USC, 79-78, Friday night when Stephanie Kasperski's desperation shot dropped at the buzzer.

The Trojans inched their way back into the game — a game in which neither team led by more than eight points — when center Monica Lamb scored on a layin to pull USC within one, 77-76, with just 27 seconds left on the clock.

Oregon turned the ball over on its ensuing possession, and Lamb followed up with a short jumper to give the Trojans the lead (78-77) with eight seconds remaining.

After a timeout, the Ducks' Lauri Landerholm sped down the court and misfired a jumper. Kasperski collected the rebound and lofted the last-second shot to give Oregon the win.

Gabi Neumann led all scorers with 31 points on 15 of 21 from the field while playing up against one of the best center's in the conference in the Trojans' Lamb. Neumann also topped all rebounders with 11 caroms.

USC outshot Oregon 54.4 percent to 47.4, but the Ducks dominated the boards, out-rebounding the Trojans 48-25.

The Ducks completed the sweep Saturday night, routing UCLA 77-57.

Oregon, 19-5 overall and 11-3 in the Pac-10, scored the first nine points and kept UCLA under tight reins for most of the game.

The Bruins made a final run with 8:06 remaining to move within seven, 57-50, but the Ducks dominated the boards and coveted free throws to secure the victory — Oregon's eighth straight.

Landerholm led the Ducks' offensive attack with 20 points, while Kasperski poured in 18.

Landerholm also led the team with 12 rebounds and seven assists.

The Ducks battle with conference-leading University of Washington on Thursday night in Mac Court. The Huskies, ranked 19th last week, are 12-2 in conference play and 20-4 overall.
