

Hoosiers

High School basketball team's 1954 win of the Indiana State basketball championships.

Anspaugh is better known as an Emmy-award-winning director of "Hill Street Blues" and "St. Elsewhere." Pizzo wrote the script for "Hoosiers" while on leave from his producer duties at Time-Life Films where he helped develop "Fort Apache, the Bronx" and "They All Laughed."

Other characters didn't benefit from this solidarity, however.

Fellow teacher Myra Fleener (played by Barbara Hershey) is a cold-hearted character, bitter from unrealized dreams.

Shooter fares a little better in the script, but not much. Hopper adds some credence to the role as he enacts the pain of withdrawal from years of alcoholism. But Shooter's drunken weaving and spurts of wisdom fall short of the enlightened experience of a well-rounded character.

There are too many narrow-minded individuals populating this movie, in my opinion. I realize the filmmakers want to get a point across, but I hate small-town movies in which 95 percent of the townspeople lead bitter, vindictive lives.

A couple of naysayers would have gotten the point across. Instead, most of the referees, the sheriff, the barber, the school drama coach and several more townspeople all try to undermine Dale's coaching in various ineffectual ways.

But overall, the film-makers take an often-told story and add plot and characterization that work.
