Buckeyes end Ducks' season

The Oregon women's storybook basketball season came to an abrupt halt Saturday night.

But Coach Elwin Heiny did not discuss the loss with his players after 10th-ranked Ohio State University powered its way to a 76-62, second-round NCAA tournament victory despite the record-breaking McArthur Court crowd of 5,157.

"I didn't talk about tonight's game much, because we lost and they know that," he said. "I really talked about the season in general."

And what a season it was. The Ducks overcame the pre-season loss of two potential starters, Amy Pettersen and Tami Richard, and then a part-time starter to academic deficiencies in Shelly Ray.

Then came the December losses to Top 20 teams Long Beach State University and Texas Tech, followed by an early struggle in league play, losing three of five games on the road.

Oregon, behind the emergence of 6-foot-7 freshman Stefanie Kasperski and forward Kris Glidden, started gaining steam in January. The Ducks won 11 games in a row, 13 straight at Mac Court, and avenged early season losses to the University of Washington, USC and UCLA.

Senior guard Lauri Landerholm culminated an outstanding career by being named the Pacific 10 Conference's Player of the Year. The Ducks were even ranked at one point as high as 18th in The Associated Press poll, before the regular season-ending loss to the University of California at Berkeley.

Oregon waded through all that adversity to post an impressive 23-7 record, tie for second in the Pac-10's first year and receive an at-large bid to the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament.

Ohio State did not give a hoot about Oregon's great season. The Buckeyes, now 25-4, capitalized on some giddy nerves and poor shooting on Oregon's part, and before the Ducks could rejuvenate themselves, Ohio State had a 6-0 lead.
