More than 3,000 students voted in the general election Wednesday and Thursday. Voters also approved nine of 10 ballot measures. The only measure voted down was Measure 4, an advisory measure to extend time between classes.

The Athletic Department budget increase passed 1,765 votes to 1,115. This will raise incidental fees by $6.55 per student per term and provide students with free tickets to men's football and basketball games.

Measure 6, a request for two added positions in the ASUO Child Care Program passed 1,968 to 772. The University Marching Band also received its 120 percent increase, as Measure 7 passed 1,665 to 1,126.

Two other funding questions were approved by voters. Measure 8, giving a 13 percent increase to the Oregon Daily Emerald passed, as did Measure 10, establishing a permanent $2 fee to fund the University Counseling Center.

Ballot Measure 5, the advisory measure recommending that the Riverfront Research Park not be built at the site of the south bank playing field, passed 2,244 to 513. Likewise, Measure 3, recommending University Main Library hours be extended during dead and finals week, passed 2,549 to 164.

The two measures to reword the ASUO Constitution, measures 1 and 2, both passed. Measure 1, rewording IFC elections procedure passed 1,670 to 433. Measure 2, to reword how the Oregon Student Public Interest Research Group is funded, passed 1,653 to 573.

distributed among the state's eight colleges and universities, Hill said.

Bill Lemman, State System executive vice chancellor, said he has no idea where the $7.8 million in cuts will be made. He said those decisions cannot be made until after Gov. Neil Goldschmidt signs the higher education budget.

But Rep. Tom Mason, D-Portland, the chairman of the budgeting committee, said none of the cuts will come out of faculty salaries. Some of the cuts could be made in general service programs and travel expense accounts for higher education officials, he said.

"We looked at detailed cuts, then the (higher education executives) said, 'OK if you're going to make the cuts, let us do it,'" Mason said.

"Some of it could come from the chancellor's office," said committee member Sen. Grattan Kerans, D-Eugene. The committee attacked State System Chancellor William Davis and his staff earlier this year for allowing administrative salaries to outpace faculty salaries since the 1985 legislative session.

Part of the cuts are needed to balance the budget, but $1.8 million of the money will be returned to State System schools to fund programs that were hand-picked by committee members.

Committee members named their pet programs the "supplemental alternative list of directed regional/university programs."

The list includes 13 pet programs for which the governor had recommended no funding.

Kerans placed a High Energy Physics research program and the Labor Education and Research Center at the University onto the list. The committee said each of the programs should receive $100,000 in 1988-89.

Kerans specifically requested funding for the LERC program, which is a unique program in the Northwest and "a great benefit to the blue-collar community."

"We have been able to receive tremendous support from labor for the State System," Kerans said. "Last biennium they were very supportive of both the faculty salary increases and the tuition freeze."

The LERC has not received an increase in funding since 1979, and program administrators "have been very patient," Kerans said.

"The decision to add funds to the LERC is something we welcome," Hill said. "But we are not sure where those funds will come from if we are asked to cut other areas to provide them."

The budgeting committee agreed to give the University an additional $2.3 million in the next two years to cover costs for added instructors and equipment, which is required because of the dramatic increase in student enrollment this year.

Earlier this week, the committee discussed limiting student enrollment at State System schools to control the rising costs. "That idea has gone by the by," Mason said.

Hill said the $2.3 million was an important increase, but the University's top priority is a raise in faculty salaries, which the budgeting committee will consider later.

The committee included $3 million for "Centers of Excellence" programs at Portland State and Oregon State universities and the University of Oregon.

That decision was contrary to the wishes of the Oregon Student Lobby.

"It makes little sense to fund the Centers of Excellence, or as we are now calling them, 'Islands' of Excellence, which directly affect a small number of students, when cuts are being suggested that will adversely affect the quality of education for most students," said OSU Director Sherry Oeser in a letter to the committee last week.

Hill was displeased with the distribution of COE funding among the three universities.

The University and PSU each received 30 percent of the COE funds, and OSU received 40 percent in the committee's budget.

The governor recommended that the committee give the University and OSU 44 percent, and PSU 12 percent.

"It looks as if the University's share of the Centers of Excellence money doesn't adequately reflect the productivity of our centers," Hill said.

Kerans agreed. "We are just going to distribute the Centers of Excellence money in the next biennium the same way as in this biennium, even though PSU has yet to get a (good return on its COE investment). They've gotten zero return at PSU," Kerans said.

The University's current $2.5 million COE program has attracted nearly $10 million in gifts and grants in the last two
