Park it

With student elections ended and more promises about a solution to the huge parking problem at this university, I would like to suggest a modest proposal that would accomplish two things at once.

It would first send a message to the people who have been treating this issue lightly that maybe it's time to do something about it.

Second, it would give people like me, who are sick to death of arriving late for classes and getting tickets every other day, a real break for a few days or weeks until the problem is eradicated.

My proposal is as follows: Park wherever you want, whenever you want, for as long as you want, and when all the real spaces run out, make your own spaces, whether it be in the courtyard, in the barricaded section of 13th, or on the front steps of Johnson Hall.

You'll probably get a few tickets but if everyone who drove cars did this, it would, at least keep those self-righteous campus cops' hands busy for a few hundred hours. Anarchy? Why the hell not?

Real love

With the pending House Bill 2325, there are some things we all need to consider.

People who say that "we should accept homosexuals and not judge their lifestyle" generally believe that they are doing the homosexual a favor. No one does the homosexual a favor by urging the rest of society to accept the behavior as normal.

We don't hear many people saying that we should stop encouraging the drug addict or the alcoholic to seek help. Similarly shouldn't we continue to encourage the homosexual to change his ways?

When you hear of the tens of thousands of homosexuals in San Francisco with the AIDS virus in their bodies, you need to ask, "Did that city do anyone a favor by having such a tolerant attitude towards homosexuality?"

Many of these men might be living normal, happy lives today, free from the AIDS threat, had they been encouraged to seek help rather than encouraged to remain in homosexuality.

Real love involves caring enough for someone so that you will help them. When you just tell someone to do their own thing regardless of the consequences, you are really encouraging them to be irresponsible, and you are really saying that you don't care about what happens to them, to their health, or to their relationships.
