"If the conditions are just right, and there isn't too much wind, and they jump well, they have a chance," said Dellinger. Not exactly words to bet the house on, but Dellinger has seen the breaks go against his pole vaulters all year long.

Oregon State has seen its share of bad breaks this season, as well. The Beavers were a thin squad to begin with, but the loss of their two best athletes sealed the team's fate.

Sprinter Calvin Nicholson, who has qualified for the Pac-10 meet in both the 100 and 200 meters, is out indefinitely. Nicholson dislocated his toe while participating in spring football workouts three weeks ago.

Karl Van Calcar, who owns the OSU school record in the steeplechase, is also sidelined, bothered by inflammation of the knee. Even without the bulk of their distance corps, the Ducks stand a good chance of sweeping every running event beyond 800 meters.

The meet is scheduled to start in the hammer circle at 12:15 pm, with the first running event beginning at 1:30 p.m. Radio station KUGN (AM 590) will broadcast the meet from approximately 2 p.m. on.
