Dellinger said. "But I'd have to be crazy not to take a world-class athlete who is delivered to my doorstep, especially when every other school in the country would take him in a minute."

The relationship between the two coaches is cordial, and both sides benefit when de Oliveira brings an athlete to Dellinger's attention. The cooperation between the two helps de Oliveira by providing him access to the facilities at Hayward Field (as a volunteer assistant to Dellinger), and an arena to showcase his growing stable of talent.

"Our relationship is very good," said de Oliveira. "When we do have disagreements we discuss them and work them out."

While de Souza and Chiamulera, like de Oliveira prodigies Joaquim Cruz and Uchenna Agu before them, are proven athletic talents, that alone is not enough to ensure collegiate success. Both have achieved grade point averages over 3.5, and both spent three terms at the University's International Language Institute learning English before they were admitted.

"I talk to them a little about school, but I don't have to say much," de Oliveira said. "They know what the situation is back home, and they realize what kind of opportunity they have here."

If de Oliveira had his way, he would help a lot more young athletes than just the truly gifted from his home land. "Unfortunately, we can only help the kids who are good enough to get scholarships get a college education. I would like to give everyone in my country a chance, but if I tried to help everyone I couldn't help anyone."

De Oliveira's empathy for less-gifted athletes runs deep, perhaps because he was such a poor trackster himself. "I loved track when I was young, but I was pretty terrible. I think that helps me now, because maybe I can understand the problems of a kid who does not have the natural talent," he said.

That understanding continues to appeal to runners of all ages and talents. Beginning in 1975 with an awkward 11-year old named Cruz, through the current crop of world-class distance runners who train with him now (including Cruz, Olympic 800-meter finalist Jose Luiz Barbosa, Mary Slaney, and Claudette Groenendaal), and on to future stars like Pedro da Silva, a decathlete who will compete for Oregon next season, the loyalty runs deep.

Jampolsky gets second

Wendy Brown of USC overcame Oregon's Camille Jampolsky Tuesday to win the women's heptathlon at the Pacific 10 Conference championships at Oregon State University in Corvallis.

The USC junior, who also plays basketball for the Trojans, is one of the country's leading triple jumpers and is considered a contender as a heptathlete on the U.S. squad for the Olympic games in 1988.

Brown scored 5,589 total points to Jampolsky's second-place total of 5,477 points, a new Oregon school record. The Oregon junior held a slim edge over Brown, 3,095 to 3,084, after the first day of competition on Monday.

The men's decathlon was also completed Tuesday. Oregon had no entrants in the event. The remaining events will take place Friday and Saturday at OSU.

In the heptathlon's second-day events, Jampolsky faltered slightly. She claimed third in the long jump with a leap of 18-17, dropped to sixth in the javelin with a heave of 122-4 and finished third in the 800 meters at 2:23.

"I don't think Wendy Brown overcame Camille," said Oregon assistant coach Mark Stream. "She just had a sub-par day."

Jampolsky is scheduled to compete in the long jump, 110-meter high hurdles and high jump on for the Ducks on Friday.
