Party

really family reunions in disguise.

Next comes the "remember when..." motif where everyone gathers together to talk about "the good ol' times." Meeting with family and old friends eating cookies and drinking punch.

But never let it be said that college students don't know how to eat.

It's all integral to the wider concept of survival in the real world. Of course, one good dish can make or break the party.

The food issue can get a little out of hand as the possibilities are unlimited.

People go to parties with great gastronomical expectations. So the better the food, the better the party.

An end-of-the-year party, however, must exceed the traditional bag of chips and assorted dips. Try to keep the theme in mind. Rent some cooks, or a pool and a few palm trees. If all else fails remember, put it on a plate. It'll taste better.

An appropriate way to end the party is with a farewell toast to the graduates. After offering a plethora of fun and remembrance, don't forget to honor the graduates and wish them the best of luck. Entering the real world is kind of scary.

But seriously, graduation is a special time that should be celebrated with family and friends. It is a time to look back on the tender, educational moments of the past four years and set goals for the future.

A graduation party will top all others not necessarily because it is the wildest, but because it is the last.
