

Impeachment must be warranted, scholar says

By Stanley Nelson
Of the Emerald

The implications of the impeachment process is vitally important to know if the United States is to restore integrity to the federal government, a legal scholar said on Tuesday.

Jonathan Alack, with the Center for Scholarly Legal Research, spoke before a crowd of more than 50 people in the Harris Hall chambers of the city hall.

Aleck stressed the forum was not meant to advocate or encourage the impeachment of the president, but to address the responsibility America has to proceed with impeachment if evidence warrants.

The meaning and implication of the impeachment process must be contemplated and understood thoroughly, he said. Just as a doctor understands the risks and necessity of surgery, so Congress must invoke impeachment if warranted, he said.

Distinctions must be made between the presidency, the office and the president himself and what he can be held accountable for, as well as the policy and the institutions of government, Aleck said.

"There is no real rule in what standard of truth is necessary in a presidential impeachment," he said, but it must be clear and convincing, which is more than what is expected in a civil case but less than a criminal case.

Much of what the president is being charged is hearsay, and much involves national security questions that the president can invoke executive privilege, to exclude from public eye, Aleck said.

Charles Black, a conservative law professor at Yale University, has stated the definition of high crimes and misdemeanor, which is grounds for impeachment, is meant to be broad and relatively undefined.

"Those offenses are those which a reasonable person might anticipate would be thought abusive and wrong without reference to partisan policy or difference of opinion on policy," Aleck quoted of Black.

What must be determined is what actions the president knew to be in violation of U.S. policy, and the present Iran/Contra hearings are important to gather information to determine that, Aleck said.

The talk was sponsored by the group Restore Integrity to National Government. RING formed in June in light of the precedents set by the Reagan administration in departing from the constitutional requirements of checks and balances.

Its purpose is to encourage legislators to take special care to protect our constitutional form of democratic government, according to a statement of purpose by RING co-founder Ralph Penunuri.

RING's goals include a call for the impeachment of President Reagan and a full federal investigation of his staff. In addition, it seeks to serve as a focal point for community action and community information.
