

IFC reviews child care subsidy eligibility levels

By Carolyn Lamberson
Of the Emerald

The Incidental Fee Committee met Wednesday afternoon to decide on changes in the child care subsidy program, and the ASUO Executive saw defeat for the first time since taking office in May.

The child care subsidy program receives $80,000 to help needy parent/students defray the cost of child care while attending the University.

According to the ASUO Executive Coordinator Susan Sowards, the ASUO Child Care Task Force requested the elimination of a subsidy for parents who are determined to have no need or are $1,000 in the black in the quarter aid is figured.

The task force, in conjunction with the Executive, also recommended a student's Guaranteed Student Loan not be used in determining a student's need level.

According to the proposal submitted to the IFC, the subsidy need level is based on information provided by the financial aid office.

The task force determined that this system would penalize students who didn't accept GSLs by reducing their subsidy while they received no extra aid, according to the proposal. The proposal also says the Financial Aid office is willing to provide alternative figures that do not include GSLs at all.

However, a problem may come of that, the report says. The task force has no way of figuring the impact of the new formulas. By including the GSL, some students who need aid will be ineligible. If need is determined without use of the GSL, some parents will jump into a higher need category while others who were not eligible in the past will receive some aid.

The committee unanimously agreed not to include the GSL in figuring need, but was divided on the elimination of the no-need subsidy category.

Committee member Sandra Thompson moved to eliminate the 10 percent subsidy for parents who have no need, but the motion failed for lack of a second.

Susie Blanchette, speaking on behalf of the Amazon Co-operative child care and the Child Care and Development Centers, said this move was to ensure the subsidy program
