Theatre offers entertainment alternative

Watching an ancient movie in a campus lecture hall isn't everyone's idea of fun on a Friday night. The University Theater (UT) is one alternative for those who prefer the fervor and risk of the live stage.

By Charles Korn

The UT includes both the Robinson Theater, which seats 400, and the 100-seat Arena Theater. Six Robinson productions will be staged this year, two each term, while between three and five Arena plays will be performed beginning in winter term.

The UT kicks off its new season October 15 with a suspense-filled thriller titled "Orphans," written by Lyle Kessler. Two orphaned brothers who live together in Philadelphia take in a strange new roommate who becomes the father figure they always wanted.

The director of "Orphans" is Dr. Grant McKernie, speech department chairman. He normally does very large cast shows, but finds a welcome change in "Orphans," which involves only three actors. "For me, this is an opportunity to explore with three actors their process of character development," McKernie said. "It's rare that there are plays that
