behind us and get on to the next one."

Redshirt-freshman quarterback Bill Musgrave chastised himself. As usual. "The defense won it for us in the fourth quarter. I sure didn't do anything to help," he said. This from the player who threw for two touchdowns and 282 yards while tossing just six incompletions.

Still not convinced? There's more. Defensive coordinator Denny Shuler said, "we have to maintain this level of intensity. This is no time to let up." That sentiment would be well applied to the fans as well as the team.

Increased wins cannot help but lead to increased expectations, but clearly this team has performed beyond anyone's wildest dreams. The fact that Oregon has won in four weeks the number that most picked it to win all year should not lead logically to a Rose Bowl-or-nothing attitude. The fans are in the same boat as the team. This was a big win, but the season has a long way to go. The greatest disservice those in attendance could pay this team is to turn their backs on it after.

For the best lesson in post-victory response, Stefanick again provides the tutelage. Musing about how to celebrate the biggest win of his collegiate career, Stefanick considered going out to dinner with his family, which had traveled from Seattle to attend the game.

When he learned that USC was playing Oregon State on television later that evening, his eyes brightened and he began to dress more quickly. "What time does the game come on?" he asked, and there was no doubt in my mind how the fifth-year senior would be spending his Saturday night.

The bottom line is this: the Ducks are playing great, and the fans are beginning to respond. If they keep in mind the fact that no one expected the team to be 3-1 after four games, perhaps their appreciation and support will be reflected in the stands, irrespective of Oregon's ability to win week in and week out. Besides, it would be the perfect opportunity to make all those harbingers of doom ("after all, this is the Ducks we're talking about. They can't possibly keep this up.") eat a little crow.

Keeping it up is not the issue. The incredible fact remains that the Ducks have "gotten up" there this year at all. That alone is cause for rejoicing. It shouldn't be lost further down the road.
