

board composed of students and alumni will be appointed by the association's board of directors to negotiate the same type of program for students.

"We are sensitive to the fact that there are many students at the University with good credit, money management skills and other credit cards," Super said.

Along with the University, Oregon State University negotiated to develop this program with U.S. Bank, making the contracts between the universities separate but identical.

Lewis and Clark College, Linfield College and Portland State University will offer similar programs to their alumni as well.

"We have developed a tremendous program for our members," Super said. "We're always looking for opportunities to sponsor programs that benefit the Alumni Association and University as a whole."

Upcoming photo exhibit to show product of student workshop

Students of the University's Photography Workshop will show their work Oct. 26, through Nov. 7 at Gallery 141, located near the courtyard of Lawrence Hall.

Photographs on display represent the impressions of eight students who participated during August in the fine arts department's annual workshop based at the Malheur Field Station in eastern Oregon.

The multi-media exhibit also will feature an assortment of creative works including writings and drawings created by the students as part of the workshop.

Terri Warpinski, the University photography professor who leads the workshop, said the rich variety of scenery and wildlife in the region came as a surprise to most of the students because they expected to see an arid desert.

"People associate sand dunes and cactus with deserts," Warpinski said. "But when they come to the workshop they are surprised to also find caves, hot springs and birds of all kinds."

SKI J:

The first thing for the new term to do on your fun list is to find a social life. Now, don't panic. There's got to be one around here somewhere. Click your heels 4 times and say, "I need a social life." Waking up, you may listen to a Mexican song, or better yet, watch that famous weather show around 11pm. Don't mind the drunken fool on your couch. Anyway, you'll realize that social lives do exist. They always have.
