chitectural plan for the cafe's interior in order to meet city building code requirements. When a plan is accepted and Gunther receives his building permits, he will start refurbishing and altering the interior to accommodate the cafe.

The work will include installing insulation and electrical wiring, replacing plaster on the walls, refinishing the wood, sanding and painting and adding a heating system. Then he has to build a kitchen and alter the basement for storage.

"The work itself I don't think is that difficult," he said. "Those things are only surface things. They don't involve the structure of the building."

Gunther hopes the work can be completed in two or three months and he can open the restaurant sometime early in spring. The cafe will appeal to all age groups as it will offer senior citizen discounts as well as late-night hours for students.

"I want it to be a place where anyone feels comfortable," Gunther said. "I see this building as being a tremendous
