Mens cross country team headed for Portland meet

On Saturday, the Oregon men's cross country team will compete in the University of Portland Invitational in Clackamas. Teams running include Oregon, Oregon State, Washington State, Eastern Washington, and Portland. Eugene's Team, Hootie is among the running clubs competing.

The Ducks, who took last week off from competition, fell this week in the national polls from eighth to 10th despite not competing. This will be Oregon's final meet before taking on 8th-ranked Arizona and the rest of the conference at the Pacific-10 meet at Stanford.

Oregon coach Bill Dellinger was excited about seeing WSU for the first time this year, and said the Cougars and OSU's Beavers will be bringing some very good teams to the Portland meet that begins at 12:30 at McIver State Park. Among the individual runners, Dellinger said former Duck Don Clary will be the favorite. Chad Bennion, Brad Hudson, Buck Jones, and Steve Richards will lead Oregon's runners.

and leadership. The shortest player on the starting front line runs 6-feet-three-inches.

Kasperski, a native of West Germany, was voted the Pac-10's top freshman award last season. At 6-feet-seven-inches, she is the tallest returning player in the conference.

"Even last year, teams were changing up defenses on her a lot. It could get even worse" this season, Heiny noted.

The Oregon women's coach said he would seek to distribute the scoring load more evenly throughout the roster this year than last, when only three Oregon women averaged double-figure scoring for the season.

Both teams went through a fairly informal workout Thursday, getting acquainted on the court, posing for cameras and conducting interviews.
