

Streetwise

Is the lottery system used by the Housing Department to select residents fair?

'They should have the first pick if they've been on the list for a longer time. Or it could be based on need, like a married couple should have priority over a couple of college kids.'

— Jenny Fuller, freshman, undeclared

'I don't think they should pick people like they were lottery tickets. It should be declared on who needs it most or who's been on the waiting list first.'

— Jeannie Abrams, freshman, pre-business

'I don't think it's fair. I think they should have a questionnaire to see who really needs it the most.'

— Robert Ward, freshman, business

'The only qualification should be the amount of time you've been waiting. That's the fairest.'

— Brad Robertson, freshman, international business

'I think it should be on a first-come, first-serve basis so that people who have been waiting won't have to wait so long.'

— Foong Teng, senior, business

'I don't think it's fair in any respect because if you're really diligent in finding a home and if you really have the need, you're in the same position as the the person hoping to find a convenient place to live. It doesn't justify getting there early.'

— Curt Vanalestine, sophomore, TCF

'It's a good system. Like in Japan we have very few married students, and we have our own way. In America, they have their own way too.'

— Kaoru Matsushita, AEI student
