Ducks take aim down on 'The Farm'

'Foots don't fly without Gilbert

After a week in the national spotlight, the Oregon football team drifted back into the shadows from last week's 41-10 give-away loss to UCLA, and is now faced with a must-win situation.

The Ducks, 4-2, will travel south for the second week in a row to take on Stanford, a team flying high with two straight high-scoring wins but still fighting for respectability.

The Cardinal, 2-4, is one of the major disappointments of the Pacific-10 Conference after going 8-3 and earning a Gator Bowl bid in 1986. Misfortunes started on the "The Farm" when pre-season Heisman Trophy candidate, Brad Muster, went down with a ankle injury the first day of practice giving him limited mobility.

But with 44 points racked up over Washington State and San Diego State in each of their last two road wins, one-time cellar dweller Stanford is now a concern for Oregon coach Rich Brooks.

"In our preparation, we basically have to throw the first four games of their season out and concentrate on the Washington State and San Diego State performances to judge Stanford's football team," Brooks said in a press release from the Oregon sports information department.

ing to get back in the conference spotlight, one Oregon player will remain in the shadows — Oregon center Gary Gilbert.

But Gilbert says he doesn't mind this role. As a matter of fact he's done it all his life.

Gary played second fiddle to brother Gale, a quarterback at California and now a member of the Seattle Seahawks, ever since they were kids.

"It's always been like that, my brother was a quarterback, and I kind of accepted it. People know if things are going well the linemen are doing well," Gilbert said.

But Gary did say playing backup caused a little jealousy once, although it never affected their relationship.
