Computing Center reopens lab

By Kelvin Wee
 Emerald Reporter

The University Computing Center celebrates the reopening of their Microcomputer Support Lab this week.

The new lab, located in Room 202 of the center, is at least twice the size of the old lab that first opened in 1984.

The week's celebrations will include door prizes and drawings for a Macintosh Plus computer, an IBM Model 25 computer and a Zenith color television.

According to Kathy Heerema, microcomputer support coordinator for the Computing Center, the new lab will offer the more specialized services that the old lab could not offer because of the lack of space and employees.

"The support lab is a place where people can come to get
