democracies because the military forces are untouched." Isquierda Unida, comprised of seven different political groups opposed to the Pinochet rule, proposes forcing the regime out through civil resistance — by being "ungovernable."

Although the coalition remains clandestine, Diaz described their forces' success in student, trade union and professional union movements throughout the country.

In a question and answer session, Diaz said that his goals are not only to end physical human rights violations but also to end restrictions of economic and social freedoms.

Diaz emphasized the need for the different opposition groups in Chile to work together toward an agreement on how to build a solid democratic structure after a Pinochet defeat.
