no logical reason for dropping the program.
"It's all politics," he said. "During those last three years, the program was basically self-supported anyway. The University had almost nothing invested in the program except my salary (as coach). How much could it have costed for goggles and bathing suits?"

Van Rossen added that the team had raised money to help support the program by selling programs at football games, and plans were in the works for a souvenir concession stand to be set up in McArthur Court that would have brought in approximately $60,000 according to Van Rossen.

"Enough money had been raised," he said. "We even had
