

'Decline' definite eye opener; basic facts brought to light

"The Decline of the Geek Empire," a film of epic and smelly proportions by filmmaker Jack Austin Fastbinder, tells the tale of a modern empire, the Geek empire, in our old home of Chlamydia.

Filmed in brilliant Stink-o-vision, "The Decline of the Geek Empire" is a well-filmed tribute to the frat boys and sorority bitches who make up a large portion of the OSU student population. Fastbinder focuses on the touching and disgustingly cute relationship of a Geek couple, Chip and Susie.

Chip, a Sigma-O and Susie, a Zelta-Gamma, have been pinned since their freshmen year at OSU. But all is not well in paradise, and Fastbinder takes the hero, Chip, through the harrowing experience of hazing, court tryouts, rush week and tailgaters at the Civil War game.

Unfortunately, Chip is not a strong frat boy. And his faithful eyes for Susie are turned away, as the venomous Tri-Alpha Veronica threatens to drive away with Chip in her 1987 Red Mazda Rx-7 Turbo.

Susie, out to protect her man, makes a stand to get her man back. She exposes Veronica to be the rich bitch she is at an all-Geek function. Susie's speech from atop a tower of Henry Weinhard's plastic cups and Corona bottles is nothing short of touching. As mascara streams down her cheeks and mucus runs from her tiny sorority girl nose, she proclaims her love for Chip and tells the world of the evil Veronica's relationships with the local pimp, various University administrators and a bull out in the animal science lab.

And the Stink-o-vision is ever-so-pungent, especially in this scene. The smell of beer, sweat, sex, vomit and other bodily fluids is an memorable one.

In the grander scheme of things, "The Decline of the Geek Empire" is an astute observation of everything wrong in today's Geek society. Elitism, extreme flaunting of wealth, corruption, misplaced values and morals, stupidity and general bitchiness are all qualities that run rampant in this society. Fastbinder shows it so well, so true to life, so perfectly smelly.

As for the acting, well, there isn't much to say. This message movie about the self destruction of the Geek system isn't about acting. The actors are completely forgettable. And Fastbinder wants it that way.

Chip and Suzi star in the lusty and decadent Geek docu-drama. Says Chip, "How do you expect us to come if you don't?"

Smug O'Bastard, as Chip, and Pretty Annoying, as Susie, both give good performances as two completely shallow and superficial people. However, one is lead to believe it doesn't take much acting for these two to get into character. These attitudes and actions seem to come pretty damn easy.

As for Bella DeSlut, the actress who portrays the ever-bitchy Veronica, she is perfectly cast — via the casting couch, as they say in Hollywood. No one comes to mind who could play Veronica so perfectly and with such ease. What a fucking bitch!

This film is showing nightly at the Chlamydia Theatre, with showings at 9 and 12. For a great look at the system and the stereotype everyone loves to hate, check it out.

OSU Civil War 1987

Once again the ROTC cadets triumph in the annual OSU Civil War as the typical pansy-assed frat boys get caught with their shorts down. Better luck next year boys.
