gressive, angry behavior; they can feel it and they know they're doing it, but they don't know how to get out of it, he said.

"That's where the parents come in," O'Brien said. "We can teach them how to get out of that."

O'Brien and Fagot both recommend that parents watch television with their children, rather than give them uncontrolled access.

"You really do have to monitor programs for children," Fagot said.

"Lots of people say that's censorship; however, I think it's the parent's responsibility to educate."

"If they see a confrontation on TV, if they see somebody get

"Children having their values formed need more than the limited choices that these toys and cartoons are giving them," he said.

Zupan also said CALS will hold a seasonal vigil on Sunday at Valley River Center to inform shoppers that buying non-violent toys for their children is "a better way to celebrate the season."
