Thanksgiving

celebrations vary from place to place, the main thing is the bonfire, she added.

Like Norway's Mid-Summer Night festival, China's New Year festival on Jan. 1 (on the Chinese calendar) celebrates the beginning of a new season. This holiday celebrates the beginning of spring, and the beginning of "agricultural activity," said Hsiao-Wen Chang, vice president of the Chinese Student Association.

During the Chinese New Year, people gather at their own homes or at the homes of their friends and relatives to eat and celebrate, Chang said. One of the main features of the Chinese New Year is the "show of the dragon," — a symbol of good luck for the coming months, she said. Family members put on private shows on the street in front of their houses, and there are also plenty of activities in the center of town, Chang said.

Between the countries of Iraq and Saudi Arabia lies the tiny nation of Kuwait. Around the end of April and the beginning of May, Kuwait their normal routines, Al-Essa said. Relatives join together to eat and congratulate one another on their great effort, he said.

celebrates a Muslim holiday, Eid Al-Fitr. Eid Al-Fitr is a festival to celebrate the end of a month-long fast called Ramadan, during which the Muslims are not allowed to eat until sunset each day, said Hussein Al-Essa, a member of the Muslim Student Association.

After Ramadan, Muslims celebrate their commitment during this long month of fasting, and their return to have too much of a Thanksgiving, some Christians do use that day to "thank God for the blessed year," said Singaporean exchange student Ming-Li Tan. She added that most Singaporeans do not celebrate the holiday, but the Hallmark Corp. sells cards there. "We have Hallmark cards for all seasons," she said, "but we don't have those holidays."
